Mr. McAuley's return to this city, while we send no special report, gives a hold on the affection of our theatre-goers, was the occasion of calling together at the Arch Street Theatre last evening an excellent audience, both as regards numbers and quality. From the moment honest, cherrv, stout-hearted Uncle Tom's in his full capacity, and garnished with the circus, hung in hand came upon the stage until the falling of the curtain, he had the warm sympathy of his audience with him. This was frequently manifested by the most earnest signs of approval, and it is safe to say when the delighted audience was in full cry for the arrival of the Arch this season, Mr. McAuley's personation of the character of his old deputy has lost none of its former racy flavor of the salt, none of that quaintness, drollness, and quiet pathos which so quickly touch the heart of the looker-on.

And with honest and fearless indignation, while a dead silence reigned roughs at Keppel's bar-room, his acting was even more thrilling and startling. He has added many strong points to his personation, and it now stands before the public as one of the most original and best-shaped comedians of American character in rump life that have yet been created.—Philadelphia Enquirer.

Will appear at the Opera House Wednesday, Nov. 26th.
